

“ASK THE EXPERT”

Question—Do I need any type of permit before I install my dock?

Answer—Generally, no. However, there are a few exceptions. Seasonal one family docks in inland lakes in Michigan normally do not require any type of permit, either from the state or local government. However, if the proposed dock is permanent (or even a seasonal dock that is not removed during the offseason), a state permit is required. The same is true with regard to a dock used by more than one family, which is normally considered a “marina.” Furthermore if a dock in an inland lake is overly long and impedes navigation, state officials can require that the dock be moved or shortened.

Most local governments (cities, villages and townships) do not require dock permits. However, there may be local ordinances that impose regulations on docks in addition to state requirements

The regulations for docks on the Great Lakes (and even for certain lakes tied into the Great Lakes by channel) are different. In those situations, even seasonal docks may require a permit from both the state of Michigan and the United States Army Corp of Engineers. Please see my article in the Spring, 2011 issue of the Michigan Riparian Magazine

-Cliff Bloom, ML&SA Attorney

* * *

If you would like any of our experts (our experts include our riparian attorney, a biologist, a limnologist, an engineer, a college professor and a state agency official) to respond in this magazine to a short question, please forward the question to the Michigan Riparian Magazine at 304 East Main Street, Stanton, Michigan 48888 or send an email to swagner@mlswa.org.